CARS COLLIDE ON INTERURBAN

East and West Bound Limiteds Crash Together, Near Girtan Station, When Brakes Refuse to Work. No One Seriously Injured.

ONE MOTORMAN RESIGNS

At head-on collision, caused by the brakes of one car refusing to work, occurred on the interurban at Girtan Station, about 10 miles west of this town at near 8:55 o'clock Thursday night. The front vestibules of both cars were demolished, but the passengers and crews, although considerably shaken up, were not injured. O. F. Slusser, motorman on the car on which the brakes refused to work, resigned immediately after the smash up.

The cars in the collision were the west-bound limited leaving here at 8:37 o'clock and the east-bound limited due here at 9:08 o'clock. The two cars are supposed to meet at Girtan. The west-bound car in charge of John Snoddy, motorman, and James Sutton, conductor, had arrived at Girtan. They are supposed to run up to the switch and throw it to let the east-bound car run on to the switch

Sutton threw the switch, but before Snoddy could run the west-bound car back, the east-bound car in charge of O. F. Slusser, motorman, and Forest Hughes, conductor, crashed into the west-bound car.

Slusser stated that he applied the air but that it would not work for several seconds. After the air did grip the brake, the wheels started to slide on the track, and it was impossible to stop the rushing car. Slusser immediately got connection with head quarters at Indianapolis with his pocket telephone, and after telling them what had happened, also informed them that he had resigned.

Two extra cars were sent out from here and took the passengers on to their destinations. The two crippled cars were taken to Indianapolis. Neither of the cars were heavily loaded. A few of the passengers were badly shaken up, but no one was seriously injured.

A NEW SUIT FILED.

The Central Trust Co., administrator of the estate of Nathan Ader has filed suit in the circuit court against Martha McKee Ader and others. The suit is in the form of a petition to sell real estate and to quiet the titles to the real estate involved.

BODY OF SUICIDE FOUND IN A SHED

Frank Spencer, of Russellville, an Aged Shoemaker, Kills Himself. No Cause Assigned For Act.

A SHOCK TO THE PEOPLE

The body of Frank Spencer, a shoemaker of Russellville, was found Wednesday in the shed of the building used by the cement block firm with a bullet hole near the temple and a revolver lying by his side. All appearance points toward suicide. The body was cold and stiff and he evidently fired the shot that ended his existence early in the night. Some report that they heard a revolver shot between ten and eleven o'clock, but that they paid little attention to it.

The body was found by Elwood Rayl, who went to the shed to get some tools he had left there. He raised the alarm at once. The body was then removed to the undertaking establishment, to await the coming of the coroner, who arrived about three o'clock, and rendered a verdict of suicide.

Mr. Spencer was a man of some sixty years or more of age. He was afflicted with deafness, but was always jovial and ready for fun, especially with young people whom he passed many hours in play. He worked along at his trade, taking the world as it came, never being heard to make much complaint. Hence the finding of his body came as a shock to the people. Financial difficulty evidently was not the cause, for about $26 was found in his pockets. He left no note, so far as the coroner was able to learn, to explain the cause of his act. He leaves two sons and a daughter, the latter being in Kansas at present.

CHAMPION FANCY POOL SHOT HERE

Joe Hood, Master of Over 100 Seemingly Impossible Plays, Will Give an Exhibition Tonight in the Elk's Club Rooms.

MAKES SHOTS BLINDFOLDED

The "Napoleon" of fancy shots, that is what they call him, Joe Hood, master of more than 100 wonderful plays, is the man and he is in Greencastle to-day and to night and will give an exhibition of his trick and fancy pool playing in the Elk's club room.

Hood stopped off here today on his way to Indianapolis, where he will give an exhibition tomorrow night, and made arrangements with the Elk's to give the exhibition tonight.

The champion fancy pool shot is a wonder at his specialty. He makes a 15 ball combination shot, shoots a ball off the pool tables into the ball rack hanging on the side of the wall, puts 14 balls into 6 pockets at one shot, makes difficult shots while blindfolded and does many other remarkable feats. A large number of Elks will see him do his stunts tonight.

PERSONAL

William H. Franklin, colored, age 16 died at the home of his parents, Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Franklin, on Tennessee street at 6 o'clock this morning. The funeral services will be held at the Baptist Church, colored, at 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Interment in Forest Hill Cemetery.

Tilman Cline, who has been seriously ill at his home on north Indiana street with pneumonia, is improving.

Mrs. Nora McVey, of Bainbridge was here today.

Mrs. F. Rice, of Bainbridge was here this afternoon.

J. A. Cammack, of Radcliffe, Iowa is here visiting his brother, J. O. Cammack and family.

John McElroy and Lawrence Atkey were in Indianapolis yesterday. Mr. McElroy had an operation performed on one of his eyes, while in Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Durham left today for an extended visit in Des Moines, Iowa.

W. M. Sutherland returned this afternoon from a short business trip in Rockville.

David Skelton of Reelsville was here today.

The Century Club will meet with Mrs. J. G. Campbell Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Mrs. Campbell will have the paper.

Frank Coss was in Indianapolis today.

There will be a call meeting of the Fortnightly Club at the home of Mrs. E. Ellis, at 7 o'clock this evening.

John Hill is confined to his home on Green St. with a bad cold.

Clifford H. Peyton left for St. Louis on an extended business trip.

The interior of the interurban station is receiving a new coat of paint. Several "no smoking" and "no defacing" signs also newly painted by Verne Twigg are now adorning the walls.

NO INDICATIONS OF FOUL PLAY

The Death of Fletcher Light Was Caused by Paralysis of the Heart, Is Coroner's Finding.

BODY TAKEN TO FREEDOM

That Fletcher Light died from paralysis of the heart, was the finding of Coroner Gillespie and the two physicians, Dr. King and Gillespie, who held the autopsy. Coroner Gillespie states this afternoon that the case was the most baffling one that has ever been before him.

The physicians could not find any absolute proof as to the cause of the death, but from appearances, they believed that it was caused by paralysis of the muscle of the heart. There were no indications of foul play. Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Light of Freedom arrived here last night and accompanied the body to Freedom this morning. The funeral services will be held at Freedom tomorrow morning.

Colonel Brown, a veteran of the Civil War and a noted Bird and Bee man, gave an extremely interesting 20 minutes talk on Bird, at the Greencastle High School Thursday morning at Chapel. He is quite an interesting talker. He had a large audience which seemed to please him greatly. The students of High School, thank Dr. Gobin for bringing him to Greencastle as he was quite a change from the monotonous subjects generally broached and talked upon. His subjects were Blue Martin and Red headed woodpeckers, he vividly illustrated his stories of these birds.

How Tommy Played Truant

"Tommy, Tommy, aren't you ready for school yet?" called his little sister.

"No," shouted back Tommy, parting his hair for the twentieth time that morning. "You'd better go on to school, Sue, 'cause I've got to blacken my shoes and find my hat and books, and, anyhow, I promised to wait for Dick Brown, and, anyhow, I might be late."

"If you are, Thomas, father will whip you this evening when he comes home," came up to the ears of Tommy, not in the voice of Sue, but in his mother's tones.

"Huh!" said Tommy. "Ma never says 'I'll whip you myself.' It's always, 'Thomas, if you don't obey instantly, father'll whip you when he comes home this evening.' I ain't scared of father, anyhow, and I'll prove it to all of 'em. See if I don't by jimminy I've got the finest idea," said Tommy. "I wonder what in the mischief is keeping Dick Brown this morning? I wish he'd hurry on and come."

After what seemed an eternity to the impatient boy, "Tom, Tom," a boyish voice was calling.

"Come on up, Dick, I'm not quite ready," answered Tommy.

"Dick, have you got plenty of lunch?" eagerly questioned Tommy.

"Yes, Tom, I told mother to give me an extra large lunch today. This kind of weather always makes me hungry."

"Fine!" and Tommy was silent.

When the boys came downstairs Tommy's mother was sitting in the library reading her latest book.

"Dear me," she exclaimed as they entered. "Tommy, you are going to be dreadful late, and, as I promised you, your father'll whip you."

Tommy mumbled something about other boys' mothers helping them to dress, walked over to the fruit dish, slipped a couple of oranges and some bananas into his capacious lunch box and walked out of the house presumably to school.

With a sigh his mother resumed her reading.

Quick as he was out of the hearing of his mother he proposed that he and Dick play "hooky." After much persuasion on the part of Tommy, to the effect that they'd get licked anyhow for being late, Dick finally consented to go.

"Let's hide our books in the old car barn and eat our lunch in the haunted house," boldly suggested Tommy, who at that time felt brave enough to do anything.

"I—er—er," Dick began.

"I—er—er," sneered Tommy, and that settled it. Dick would do anything to prove that he wasn't a coward.

After eating their lunch the boys went off to a moving picture show, where they were enthralled by the daring of the boy hero, who did all kinds of impossible things. When the show was over the boys came back after their books, but both sets were gone. They searched the whole building, but somebody had sneaked in while they were enjoying themselves and stolen them. The boys, thoroughly frightened and afraid to go home without their books, started weeping.

"Tommy wasn't at school today," Sue electrified her mother by saying.

"I'll bet Tommy's played truant," came from the depths of the library.

"O, Tom, go find him," cried Mrs. Moore, bordering on hysterics. Mr. Moore jumped up, slammed his desk shut, put on his hat and left the house.

"I'll teach that young fellow how to play hooky," said he. "Just wait until I catch him, I'll give him the best lambasting he's ever had in his life."

Dick's father met Tommy's father half-way down the block.

"Come on Brown and help me find Tommy."

"What! Tommy, too?" said Mr. Brown. "Why I was just going up to your house to see if Dick was there."

"Well, you can search elsewhere," said Mr. Moore, "because Tommy's been gone since morning."

Just then he was interrupted by a scared breathless boy, who said:

"I saw a light in the old car barn and I heard somebody moaning."

"There's our boys," said Mr. Moore confidently. "Hurry Brown, we'll catch them redhanded."

They made their way to the deserted car barn, and the moans that came from it were enough to frighten the boldest.

"Just listen to those young rascals; go through the back door," said Mr. Brown, "and we'll give them a dose of their own medicine."

The boys were sitting down on the floor eating the remains of their luncheon, and between mouthfuls uttering those blood-curdling moans, which were scaring the community.

"Stop that," commanded Mr. Moore, and both Tommy and Dick dropped the sandwiches in their fright.

The boys obeyed without a word.

Silent and crestfallen they walked slowly home, for they knew what was in store for them when their fathers found out that they had lost their books, besides playing hooky.

To Waterproof Boots.

Melt together two parts of beeswax with one part of mutton fat, and apply to the leather at night; the boots should then be wiped next morning with a flannel. When blacked the boots will not polish so well at first, but after the blacking has been used several times they will polish brilliantly.

VALUE OF MARKET HAY

Palatability the First Thing to Be Sought—Higher Grade Better Pay.

"Conditions affecting the value of market hay" is the title of a valuable illustrated pamphlet by H. B. McClure of the bureau of plant industry, issued by the United States department of agriculture. The paper was prepared for an address delivered before the convention of the national hay association at Cedar Point, O., in July, 1908. The author says that his investigation indicates that at present three-fourths of the low-grade market hay is the result of improper practices, such as allowing the meadow to become grassy and weedy, cutting too late, improper baling, etc., on the part of the producer, and is not caused by rain or unfavorable weather alone, as is generally supposed. He also finds in order to grow timothy hay successfully year after year the farmer must also grow some legume crop in the rotation for either hay or pasture or as a green manuring crop, which aids in keeping up the crop-producing power of the land.

On this latter point he says further: When crops are sold from the farm year after year and no attempt is made toward a systematic rotation, and especially where legumes are not grown, the land in the course of time will become low in available plant food and the yield will be greatly lessened.

In fact, on many farms the soil has been so depleted of its fertility that farming is not a paying proposition. It has been found that when land begins to lose its crop-producing power the loss of fertility may be retarded by a proper rotation of crops in which legumes, such as clover, alfalfa, cowpeas, and soy beans, are grown. Many farmers who in the past have grown nothing but timothy hay for the market are now commencing to grow clover in order to help build up their land. This is why under certain conditions farmers grow kinds of hay which at present are not in great demand in the market. This year there are more straight clover and clover-mixed hay sent to the market than usual, and dealers sometimes have difficulty in getting enough timothy hay to supply their trade. It would seem from our observations that there is less timothy hay and more clover being grown each year, and the reasons just given show why the timothy area is decreasing.

Even though the greatest demand is for timothy, the average feeder will not suffer in any way if he is not able to get it, because there are other kinds of hay that will not only take the place of timothy but prove a better and more economical feed. Under ordinary conditions the shipper and the receiver make just as much money by handling one kind of hay as another, so that it is really better for all concerned if there is a smaller quantity of timothy hay produced than formerly. It is necessary, however, for the feeder to understand the feeding value of the different kinds of hay before there can be any great change in the demand for these other kinds, for it is the feeder who makes the price of hay in the market. In order to feed intelligently it is necessary to consider the functions of the nutritive substances.

He thus sums up the points in his paper. A large percentage of market hay, especially, is below a No. 1 grade. The chief reasons for this are: First, meadows are cut for a number of years after the yield has materially decreased and other tame grasses, wire-grasses, and weeds have become so numerous as to prohibit the hay grading either choice or No. 1. Second, in many localities timothy is cut too late. When cut at the end of the blooming period or when the seed is beginning to ripen, it is impossible to secure the natural green color that timothy must have in order to grade choice according to the rules of grading as adopted by the national hay association, which are used by most cities having official inspection. As a result of these practices producers are losing thousands of dollars every year.

There are two main reasons why timothy has for a number of years been regarded as the standard market hay in the eastern half of the United States. First, formerly very little tame grass of any kind was grown for hay in the great tame-hay section; consequently market hay consisted of wild or prairie hay and timothy hay. Second, timothy is a valuable hay, for two reasons: It is a very palatable hay, and horses therefore eat it readily; it has no bad effects, as there is no danger of the horse overeating and it is non-laxative. For these reasons feeders have become used to timothy for feeding all classes of horses.

At present clover-mixed hay, especially light clover mixed, brings about the same price as No. 2 timothy. The reason this kind of hay is not in greater demand and does not bring a better price is that feeders do not realize that it contains more nutrients, especially protein, than timothy, and that it will give better returns when fed to horses subject to hard labor, such as heavy hauling and transferring.

Before the value of any kind of hay can be determined, the feeder must know the purpose for which it is to be fed and its adaptability for such a purpose. For example, owners of racing and fancy driving horses feed the choicest of timothy hay chiefly because it is very palatable, agrees with the horse and furnishes the required amount of bulk needed in the ration. The purpose in feeding hay to horses doing hard labor is to furnish not only bulk but part of the nutrients, especially protein, required in the ration. For this class of horses good timothy and clover mixed hay will prove more satisfactory than any grade of timothy, being cheaper and containing more nutrients than timothy.

The most important thing in determining the value of hay is palatability, for if it is not relished not enough will be eaten to furnish much nourishment to the animal. When hay is exposed in the field too long in the hot sun or is subject to rain, its palatability will be lessened, which in turn lowers its market and feeding value. Low-grade hay is not as palatable nor does it contain as much nourishment as the better grades.

THE ASPARAGUS BED.

Asparagus may be started either from seed or buying one or two-year-old seedlings. Any good loamy garden soil is good for growing asparagus. An ounce of seed will produce about 200 plants in a normal season with ordinary care. Sow the seed in rows in the garden as for beans or corn, covering them two or three inches deep, says the mirror and Farmer. The seed may be sown early as it takes about six weeks for them to sprout and come up. Cultivate the surface after planting to keep down weeds while the young plants are coming. They are very fine and tender when they first appear above the ground, and care must be taken in the first cultivation during the summer and early fall, as for other small garden crops, and the plants will be ready for moving either the same fall or the following spring or fall, according to the condition for setting in permanent quarters. For preparing the permanent asparagus row, select the space and either plow or dig a deep trench and fill the bottom of it with three or four of stable manure and other available fertilizers, such as ashes and other refuse. A good quantity and a variety of fertilizers under the plants will give the best results since they are to remain in one place for many years. Set the young plants about two feet apart in the bottom of the furrow, cover the roots lightly with soil at first, and gradually fill in as the plants grow. Keep down weeds and keep the soil well stirred during the growing season, and cover the row with manure in the fall.

CARIN FOR THE WATER FOWLS.

Geese and ducks are becoming more salable each season. The price of geese was almost treble that of chickens in the market during November and December of last year. Ducks did not bring a price equal to that received for geese, but even they sold remarkably well. Geese hatch their own eggs and brood the goslings. They seem to care for them better than do mother hens or brooders. When once the goslings are a week or 10 days old, they grow very fast and require little attention. Old, marshy lands, or those that have a fairly good crop of grass, afford good ranging land for geese. Geese do best if they have a dry spot on elevated land to go to when it rains. After the goslings are three weeks old they will graze their entire living from the grass during the summer. Ducks must be continually fed or they will not prosper. Young ducks must be fed several times a day on mixed meal or cracked corn, or they do not grow as they should. The best means of feeding cracked corn to young ducks is to put the corn into a shallow pan of water and let the ducks take it from the water as they eat it. Ducks require water to drink with their food.

THE VERSATILE FARMER.

As a matter of fact the farmer is one of the very few men who are qualified to be called "all round men." His roofless workshop is at a distance from communities at any considerable size, hence he naturally and almost insensibly becomes a master, in part at least, of practically all the trades and professions, not because he is miserly or lacking in funds but because he must grapple with things at first hand. He becomes perforce a bricklayer, carpenter, plumber, butcher, sheepherder, swineherd, hunter, veterinarian, surgeon, dentist, well driller, bacteriologist, entomologist, meteorologist, horticulturist, agriculturist, pomologist and at times minister, tinsmith, watchmaker, lawyer and even on occasions, an undertaker.

There is one method that is almost sure to make the hens lay when all others fail, and that is to withhold all food except an ounce of lean meat or cut bone twice a day. This should be fed raw. Meat is apparently more costly than grain but the results obtained are much larger when compared to those produced by grain and other foods and thus the comparative cost of the meat is much less.

"The professor says that music owes a great deal to Rossini," said the young woman. "What's Rossini?" "That," replied Mr. Cumrox, "is probably Italian for 'rosin'."

Fortune Telling

Does not take into consideration the one essential to woman's happiness—woman's health. The woman who neglects her health is neglecting the very foundation of all good fortune. For without health love loses its lustre and gold is but dross. Womanly health when lost or impaired may generally be regained by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

This Prescription has, for over 40 years, been curing delicate, weak, pain-wracked women, by the hundreds of thousands and this too in the privacy of their homes without their having to submit to indelicate questionings and offensively repugnant examinations.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence held as sacredly confidential. Address World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce's Great Family Doctor Book, The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, newly revised up-to-date edition—1000 pages, answers in plain English hosts of delicate questions which every woman, single or married, ought to know about. Sent free, in plain wrapper to any address on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to cover mailing only, or in cloth binding for 31 stamps.

WHAT A JAPANESE WIFE LEARNS

The Art of Managing Men is the Only One That She Studies.

A Japanese wife is more than a wife. She is an artist, says Adachi Kinno-suke, in "The Delineator." She is an artist in that most difficult of arts—and most needful—the art of handling men. It is the consuming ambition of her life. For it and in it she lives.

The woman of Nippon is not notably attractive in either face or figure. She suffers a severe handicap in comparison with English and American women. Therefore she does the next best thing—she displays policy. I believe your word for it is tact.

Of the woman of Japan there is one, just one, opinion among her judges—especially among her foreign critics: As a wife, she is all gentleness and loveliness. This is quite remarkable, coming from men of the world around. Whatever may be their criticism on other things, they are all praise for the Japanese woman as a wife. There is a reason; there are more reasons than one.

In the first place she is a past mistress in the art of commanding men, only in her case it is no longer an art—it is second nature with her. The basic, elemental qualification of a great commander of men, East and West, is and always has been this—to know how to obey. Everybody knows that. Even Napoleon knew that. Greater than he who saw St. Helena after seeing Austerlitz, the Japanese woman acts out what she knows—what she knows so well and has known so long that she is no longer even conscious of it.

That Disappointing Girl.

There are not a few bright girls who have been brought up with many advantages who prove to be strangely disappointing when thrown on their own resources.

"We expected more of Jane," her friends think to themselves, even if they are not unkind enough to say so openly. But Jane just hasn't taken a very big place in the world of affairs and has never been given a position of responsibility. And this is not because Jane lacks brains. Everybody knows that she has real ability—that is, everybody except Jane. And that is just the point—Jane is just the very one who ought to know it.

The chances are that this is not her fault either, but the fault of her dear, loyal mother, who has always wanted to do everything that any mother could do for her daughter. And the trouble is that she has done too much. If a thing has been a little hard, that mother has said "Oh, never mind, dear, let mother do it." And the mother has done it, with the result that the daughter never found out what she could do. Thrown on her own resources in the world of business, the girl has taken some minor position, afraid of the bigger ones.

Perhaps the greatest asset that anyone can have is the sense of his own power, with it the battle is half won, and without it the simplest undertakings seem hard. And no one can impart this sense of power so easily as a mother, for she can teach her children to feel it when they are still young. And likewise by constantly assuming the inefficiency of her children she can keep them from ever experiencing it.

A Child's Mind.

To a child all that passes through the mind appears real, and he is often unable to distinguish fact from fancy. He is confused by punishment for "not telling the truth" when what he says is perfectly true to him. So also the perception of the right of private property is not natural, but arises in every nursery through the primitive "taboo." Therefore the parent or teacher, instead of presupposing such a moral code, must create it and apply it to the right objects.

The rise in the child of the dramatic instinct gives numberless opportunities for preparation for real life. The fact that imagination is so easily led into channels of action provides an opportunity for all kinds of lessons as to relationships that will afterwards exist, and imaginative right action under man circumstances.

A Shoe Tip.

Before putting on patent leather shoes always rub the surface of the vamp briskly with the warm palm of the hand, thus softening the shoe and rendering it less liable to crack. Many patent leather boots "crackle" all over the first time they are worn when this precaution might prevent the accident. Another method is the gradual warming of the shoe and it must always be remembered that shiny shoes are never kept in cold places.

Ginger Sandwiches.

Put one pound of preserved ginger through a meat chopper, add the strained juice of a large orange and rub to a paste with some whipped cream. Spread this mixture between slices of thin buttered bread; cut into squares, rounds or fingers. These are nice to serve with tea or chocolate.

To Clean Hairbrushes.

Dissolve some soda in a little hot water, then fill up the bowl with cold. Dip the bristles of the brush in, take out and shake well; repeat this several times until the brush is quite clean. The water being almost cold will prevent the bristles turning yellow and if the bowl is wide the back of the brush will be kept dry.

HIGH IDEALS OR GOOD WORK?

S CORNING to turn the talents fate had given her to commercial use, and determined to keep high ideals no matter what the outcome, Ella Finley, an artist of New York City, worked and starved herself to death in a little studio at 1613 Chestnut street.

She hitched her wagon to a star and clung desperately to her dream of fame, even when the bitterness of despair and failure hung their shadow across her life.

Was she right? Are big ideals worth more than success along a lower plane? Perhaps. It's always well to be ambitious, to have a dream of something bigger and better towards which to strive; but is it worth while to set ideals so high that we cannot reach them, and sink into the very depths of failure because we will not accept the half loaf the fates laid out?

I think not. I believe, and I imagine that most women will believe with me, that it is, after all, not the work, but how it is done that counts. Genius is a very rare spark, and we cannot all warm our hearts to the fame that leaps from it, and talent, even very real and very great talent, cannot aspire to reach the height of genius.

Why, then, should a woman who has talents drive them till they are of no account in her crazed endeavor to reach the heights of greater fame?

Of course it is bigger to do masterpieces than to paint dinner cards, or quaint signs, or advertising matter; but, after all, is the spirit that lies back of the fingers injured by using facility to write a living from an indifferent world?

This is a commercial age. We all of us count success not by achievement, but by dollars. The man who is poor is a failure, no matter what great ideals he may live up to.

The man who is rich is a success. In Chatterton's day genius did not mind starving in a garret, but now genius prefers fur-lined coats—and why not?

Let a woman earn her place in the world, then show it what she can do. What good is it to paint great pictures no one ever sees? Isn't it better to paint something that all the world will smile to see, or that all the world will learn to know and love your name by?

"I would rather starve than do the trash you do," declared Miss Finley to a friend once, in a burst of anger against the temptation which assailed her to take up commercial work. And she did starve, while the friends who did "commercial trash" bought her bits of jewelry and drove with a charity that hid itself behind a gentle mantle of "lending" to stave off the inevitable.

And the woman who for eighteen years sought to reach the heights of genius, who suffered and finally died for her art accomplished less than these girls who are painting calendars and boxes for great manufacturers. For beauty and art accomplish most when they reach the greatest number.

Miss Finley longed to be a sculptor, but because she could not afford to study she tried to paint the dreams she thought in marble, and the result was good work, perhaps, but failure for her hopes of fame.

She never realized that simpler work within the scope of her achievement, work into which she put her heart and soul, would be just as great as the masterpieces she attempted. She never dreamed that the girl who went cheerfully to her daily toil because she had to "earn a living," and who because it was "her work" did her very best, was living up to a higher ideal than the artistic one upon which Miss Finley dwelt.
